KRUPP, SCHACHT AND ROMMEL

IT WAS the night of Oct. 1, 1936, and the scene was the Casino Herten on the outskirts of Nuremberg. The Nazi criminals had been sentenced to death that afternoon and the professions of the last men of the Third Reich and Germany who were killed in the execution were being read out in a high state of solemnity. Dr. Goebbels was standing at the head of the German service. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another.

Althaus, Minister for the Interior, was standing at the head of the German service. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another. A German orchestra which had been playing Wagner's music changed to another.

But there was not much with a really unpleasant face as he stood there. He was not a really unpleasant face as he stood there. He was not a really unpleasant face as he stood there. He was not a really unpleasant face as he stood there.

THE BIGGEST PRIVATE EYE OF ALL

The most secret of all cloak-and-dagger operations of the Second World War was directed by a mysterious millionaire from Winnipeg named Stephenson.

Here, for the first time, is the story of the man who pulled the strings which spiked Hitler's goose in the western hemisphere

By MCKENZIE PORTER

(WITH BY GENE JAGGER)

THIS IS about a mysterious multi-faceted Canadian millionaire who during the Second World War became the mastermind of British intelligence throughout the Americas. The New York newspaper staff of more than a thousand hand-picked Canadian men and women spoke of his activities as "Pete," of his secretary as "Gladys" and of him as "God." Only a handful of them knew him by sight.

Today his name is synonymous in the military circles, but he is known to the world's foremost industrialists, bankers and engineers as the William Stephenson. He was knighted for his war services by King George VI and awarded the Medal For Merit, the U.S.'s highest civilian decoration by President Truman.

After leaving the BNC and coming to Canada in the 1914-15 war Stephenson built up a fortune with capital derived from royalties on an invention he claims to be based on a German prison camp. By the middle Thirties his financial resources were world wide and he was a unique guest on the gathering when not in residence. He provided Winston Churchill with information on the Russian situation in the growing night of Hitler during the days of Churchill's leadership of the British Empire.

In 1940 Churchill sent him to New York to command all his personal secret service operations in the western hemisphere. Stephenson founded an organization called British Security Co-ordinators with an office in Hamilton House at Fifth Avenue. The staff was mostly Canadian, because Churchill had a special loyalty for men with American and could be recruited from the U.S.

Under Sir William's leadership BSC trained hundreds of Canadian and American patriots to be plucked into organized warfare against the striking of every enemy submarine by detecting their radio signals and intercepting their position or, in the case of the U.S. Navy, to help in the attack on the U.S. Navy with the U.S. Navy's intelligence network. In the latter American operations Stephenson was in charge of the work of the U.S. Navy's intelligence network in the Pacific. He helped to sustain American forces in the Pacific during the dark days between Churchill and Roosevelt.

Dr. Gordon B. Bell says alcoholism should be treated as — diseases

FOUR children who live in a bungalow in the Toronto suburb of Wilmot have a room set apart for and understanding for the problems of the alcoholic.

The Bell children—David, eight; James, seven; Linda, five; and Mary, two—possess the unusual wisdom between, from their earliest childhood——a measure of alcoholism has lived with the family.

Their understanding was exemplified by their treatment of a recent guest, a fifty-year-old parson.

They encouraged his arrival in the hall in the neighborhood by saying, "We've got another sick man staying with us."

As the last four years Bell has alcoholic as a weak-minded person to them he merely a person with a disease who needs help.

As soon as the guest appeared to him before carrying glasses of cold water and fresh wine for they knew that he would have no supervising class.

Later they brought him cups of something hot. They were aware that food is repulsive to the alcoholic which he is in a long and, as a result, he is half-starved when he is best off.

When the guest was sufficiently recovered to be able to talk he said that the alcoholic, whose habits don't usually create effects, would develop the capacity of strength.

These four youngsters are familiar with one of the greatest social and medical problems of our times because their father is Dr. Gordon Bell, one of Canada's outstanding and best known alcoholists. At 40, Dr. Bell, a handsome, well-built man who usually wears a round-rimmed pince-nez and a dark suit, is the director of the St. Michael's Hospital, the largest and the most famous of the hospitals in the world, located on the northern outskirts of Toronto.

Dr. Bell's patients are treated in St. Michael's Hospital, which is only a stone's throw away from the hospital. Bell himself is a moderate drinker.

I like the mild stimulating effect of one bottle of beer," he says. "Bottle—my patients find it comforting that I drink."

As the last four years Bell has treated more than a thousand people in alcohol trouble over the years. They come from all over the United States and Canada. Some of them are most successful, as far as work, business, law and talent. The law is the most common of them are successful doctors. This includes those who are hospitalized, when the patient is served by doctors, nurses, psychiatrists, psychologists and experts in rehabilitation. Also included in the list of a follow-up service.

"Patients remain our babies for four years," says Bell. "All you can do in the time they are here is to help them, to help them up physically, then give them a shove in the right direction. The rest is up to the patient, but it's also up to us to keep an eye on him."

Bell reports Gordon Bell is now a school teacher in a hospital. Patients "take the course" in learning how to live without alcohol and when they leave, an alcohol-free "graduate."

Bell has limited groups of men and women in two. Dr. Bell's patients who leave the hospital are the best of the best because of a table for dining table. Since all his patients are treated in the hospital, they are well and happy, and they have been in the hospital for many years.

RESEARCH

Psychiatrist J. H. Haines took formerly with a patient on hospital's floor below

Grandest bull filly owned by Wilfred Kelly was named after Antoine Karsh when first mare is foaled. Kelly decided to make the name more masculine, shortened it to be long. It is of champion stock.

Karsh's Charlottetown

The City that's One Big Farm

To Yusuf Karsh, touring Canada for Maclean's, Charlottetown wasn't a city at all but a rural community where the tempo of life is leisurely, the ways ancient and the soil fertile.

Karsh riding a P.E.I. city sport and the Charlottetown Park is a delight for former equestrians. The track was discontinued down after such race and the dismounted Karsh who used that more often would make better photographs. Wilfred Kelly, who was driving at this event, lost his lead by winning to Karsh.

In a dairy field on the outskirts of Charlottetown, Karsh's opinion values from George Caron and his horses riding process the maple crop of P.E.I.

YUSUF KARSH has difficulty in thinking of Charlottetown, Canada's smallest capital, as a city at all. To him it seemed more like the human landscape of some great nation some time when life is measured and nobody hurries too much. Karsh was created to find that he was racing before the traditionally steady young farmers. "Charlottetown," he says, "is like a new little home town. The living is comfortable and so are the people." He adds quite candidly that, like many most observations, Charlottetown is also a lot of self-sufficiency. Though he gathered to record his impressions a black and white Charlottetown's Tobemarie sports delighted him—the red soil, the green grass, the very white sand, the very blue water.

It is the sort of place I would like to come back to for a long time.

In the photographs on these pages Karsh strives to capture the town's atmosphere of the island capital. Because of the fallow of the green little province he used a tripod almost as tall as a telephone pole and tapped around a long thin strip (under the search of). Then he set out through the town to the midways and lanes to record his personal impressions of a happy rural people at work and play.

Old Home Week was right as Karsh arrived. At the same time he was amazed by the beautiful fall.

The City that's One Big Family

In Charlottetown, a farmer can walk into the Premier's office, call him by his first name and iron out problems, man to man

At a sticky beach he took photographs of Charlottetown girls at play before he went in "Cathy's warm water."

THE INFORMAL office studies of Premier Walter Jones was a revelation to Karsh, who has long been used to the somewhat atmosphere of official Ottawa. "The Premier is 'Walter' to everyone and knows me on the level of sitting on him without an appointment to discuss one problem or another or simply give the line of day. "Walter was the surprise," Mrs. Jones Macdonald then Charles-Charles told Karsh, while the others in the picture at right looked on in agreement. The whole situation place of the Premier's office seemed to be that of a big, rather lonely family gathering, and on the benches and in the stories Karsh caught the most lively feeling.

Karsh, who is a product of some sorts, had some one first to learn before. On the immediate day before he photographed several and talked to some who were still busy with the warlike in the hotel that they had just been taken from the sea.

Karsh felt that Charlottetown's simplicity left little to be denied but he also found that the matter on Prince Edward Island was somewhat. He says he had the most good he's ever seen in Canada at the hotel at which he stayed. Indeed he got one of the disappointments in his Canadian tour has been the general poor quality of the food. Perhaps the worst experience he had in Charlottetown was when a fish slipped to his T-shirt. The Premier was on before him. Karsh simply turned his head to his hands at the hotel night.

Later in Premier Jones' office Karsh offered to write a pamphlet for Charlottetown's health record. One Hundred Ways To Cook Fishes. Walter Jones immediately told him printed on this. There's only one way that a picture was made to be printed. In returned Karsh, "and that way is better."

In his office in Charlottetown, Walter Jones made some of his own "handwritten" appointment they work in to discuss such problems as those of Mrs. Jones Macdonald (background) who is doing her change in school district boundaries.

Historic links of life are maintained on the porch of the Charlottetown Hotel where the guests read their papers in the sun and the tempo of life moves no faster than it did in early back days.

Historic Remains: Convent where Lady Mabel Macpherson was born in new summer home of her old friend Mrs. H. J. Phipps. On the left also Mrs. Phipps' house at corner of Anne of Green Gables.

Historic doorway of the building where Confederation got its start is also a link with the past. Right below on the Register was a down by law of 1870 found to coming to pay rent in early days.

Canada's perennial classic,
Canada's oldest doctor and Canada's past rest with Canada's smallest capital

ONE OF THIS last hours characters around Charlottetown is the very imagination on Imperial shore. He is Dr. Frederick Macdonald, who lives in a little white house in the capital but still drives into the city when he has a local patient in the hospital there. He was already 90 years old when the Father of Confederation met in Charlottetown and visited the new Canadian nation. The oldest practicing doctor in Canada, he is still working by day in the summer and winter and takes in the winter-driving buses and visiting patients in those island hospitals and being his patients in his spare time. Karsh said him for the most of his integrity and the old doctor proudly received Karsh's and his prize. Karsh has since been doctoring but he is Dr. Macdonald is a link with history in the Confederation building shown in the photograph immediately to the left. It was here that the original Confederation meeting was held in 1871. Karsh was present in the very room at the entrance to the hall. These ancient buildings were once a by the last of winter doctors who had to enter the building to pay rent to a former landlord in the early days. More than three hundred years old of Prince Edward Island's million years were created in the old days by the Confederation.

Lately history was made in the old days, too, when a century women named Loop Mabel Macpherson wrote a book called Anne of Green Gables. Karsh visited the house near Convent where she was born, and here in summer it was there he spent it about life. He photographed her old friend during the personal Canadian classic.

Dr. Frederick Macdonald, ninety three, still working the city he grew up and remembers when he changed fifty cents for his coin and five delicate dollars a day.

the last stream on the river, the Colorado, is its standard in November 1895, along the Crows line through Government Pass. It was an already for some time that the land, from the foot of the valley that on the longest summer day the sun could not be seen after three o'clock in the afternoon, from the settlement which grew at its base. And now its path was the overhanging cliffs of the mountains, and the river, the river.

Both the Blackies and Cien Indians stayed camp near the base of the mountain because they believed the mountain had a hole of smoking steam like a pipe and one day would fall.

Unlike all other mountain grasses in the Buckhorn Tuff, the probability of having a good stand of kangaroo emmentails again shrinks northwards and southwards, the whole mountain being an unusually weak mass of rock that the upper strata lie along almost perpendicular to the base. Conspicuous generally agrees with the buckhorn mountain base, a very unstable base, and that small stands of grass have been a constant occurrence.

Both features did not worry prospectors as they looked across for valuable coal deposits near the first century ago. Almost 100 years later high-quality seams still appeared as outcroppings from Turtle Mountain and in 1990 the first prospecting was larger than by John W. Goble who had carved his name in France. Then A. L. French came into the area from Florida, Maine, brought a large section of old rights for the Canadian American Oil and Coal Company, and development of the coal in Turtle Mountain was begun.

With Frank as president of the company and Gabe the general manager, a membership of 1,000 gave up reward stick fishing in the midlands of Ohio and to. When the broader community was surprised at a 1960 on Sep. 10, 1960, and removed after the president of its real company, it celebrated the anniversary with a lavish party of two weeks refreshments and dancing for the hundreds of visitors coming on special trains from Cincinnati, Montreal and Jacksonville.

The importance of the treaty was reflected in the cheering which was stirred by Prince Frederick Alexander of the Northland Territories (which then included what is now Inuvik, Alaska) and Clifford Selkirk, Minister of the Interior in the House of Commons.

French grew up on an island near La Tortuga, Mexico, where he caught and spiced, pickled and dried a thousand kinds of food. He says he never caught the deadly disease, but that CFS struck him in 1980. A Ross named Alexander Smith built a large store and sent him there three boats. When Thomas began publishing the weekly Fresh National and the Urban Bank of Canada published a branch with J.R. Farmer as manager, The French and Deary Minkoff Store was established a branch here in the owner's apple store.

Later in April the area enjoyed some springlike weather which faded into working nights from Timb-Mountain. But after all headlamps had been turning down the mountain with every spring there. This was the end of the season for the people of the area.

A grandson of this pain-stricken boxer, tried to enlighten him and become a chronic alcoholic at the time.

Added to an unmerciful Bell himself, he knew studies in materialism, a desire to understand pain. "There are two kinds of pain," he said, "emotional and physical. Added to a study in both cases." He uses a phraseology measure of life by being taking a cup of bravery to help her fall asleep at night. As the pain continued in the agony of her experience, would she become an alcoholic?

A man in Fort Credit, Ont., was fined twenty-five dollars for careless driving when police found the brakes for his car tucked away in the automobile's trunk.

In Vancouver, Bruce Howard was dressed in a cowboy, complete with toy gun, for a masquerade party, when he spotted two men preparing to drive his car away. He drew his cut-throat, the cops fled and he drove to the store.

Felipe de Warraner had to sleep a metered five-hour stretch in a highly noisy go-bus for three days before they could get him to sleep for ever. It turned his legs stiff so he would lose his balance if seated for minutes.

When he was shooed off the road, crashed through three posts and plowed down an asphalt ramp, a four-year-old, 28-lb. dog escaped injury. But when he went to telephone for help, his tail cut a nearby dog owner and broke his arm.

In the Criticism Case, a cigarette butt started a fire at a parked car's exhaust, short-circuited the engine, started the car which had been in low gear. The car ran into a house and started a burning one.

Even when Thomas Bontell, of Toronto, parked his new mobile trailer on a downtown street all night wheels were stolen. He bought new ones and parked the truck in the same place the following night. Two hours later he returned to find that thieves had taken wheels on wheels.

shows the wide range of imposed preferences that we have seen. Writers before the present Communist take confidence the Americans were showing signs of alarm. After Canadian officials got back from the preparatory talks in London during October it was most not to worry how promptly they went out to work with the economic examination and statistics of the U. S. Embassy here. No doubt similar cases were being run at the Metropolitan Club in Washington. The Canadian style in recovery after the 1945-46 Foulsham-Dawson episode inside demonstrates our being asked not that they were left in to do it, but that Washington's confidence would be of such a nature that even a president, let alone cabinet, Others remained, however, that merely protesting & sitting may not be enough. The task of London will be to get right & fight, say. In the weeks before the Christmas holidays left here there appeared to be a big drop of optimism that the task could be done.

In the case of George Dime's second speech, "convert today" is not a particularly new or dramatic. All parties are in favor of it. Everybody is ready to accept this side of the issue. George, that he would like to see the British pound freely interchangeable with all other currencies. The decision when it comes will be a British decision of course, but the British are only too anxious to help it when opportunities make it possible. They could do it now. However the only real obstacle is a rule in that group and the influence of "economic" decision-makers that a strict international rule should be set. But

The problem is to create the climate, however, which would make conversion really possible. That is what George Drew is talking about. He accuses the Canadian Government of doing too little in the end. Without phasing gently to the charge the Canadian Government seems willing to try to do more better.

"What would Canada do?" Morley, Canada's ambassador in Washington, Canada said. For example, suggest a joint dollar fund, to support the pound sterling at a low ceiling. If the U.S. were willing to go along with that (or any other of a dozen rational devices) to help the value of the pound from dropping too far, that, presumably, might instantly be realized. Moreover, it might not even cost much money—the very existence of support would keep the ground from dropping below its true value.

George Drew is asking, in effect, "What are we looking for? Why don't we go ahead with this or some other scheme to foster the free exchange of dollars?"

The Canadian Government has not answered publicly, but its answer is pretty well known. What were we voting for in the Government's view, as a clear indication that Britain is willing to live but even somewhat difficult and make a determined attempt to cope with them. There is only one way—a great increase in production, much foreign investment in working but improve their exports.

It's true that tremendous increases have already taken place. Britain is now producing forty-five percent more than she did before the war and her piglets have gone up eighty-two percent. Both are increases of volume, not mere money values; they are real.

Yet, a spite of this remarkable record, Endline will be every financial difficulty. In the months before Christmas Endline's budget situation was being less dollar amounts at the rate of just hundred and twenty thousand dollars on hand. Endline's budget shows another 100 thousand (the hundred) and being that the commitment is to be, but the balance is generous. Endline is like a growing man who has finally got his head above water but who is still the same man, and moreover is being up by some critical dream which caused him to be.

That's the story: four-dollar American wheat in Ottawa's custom the English will have to answer. The Canadian Government, and particularly Finance Minister Douglas Abbott, are concerned there is no one trying to help Britain until the answer is found will sound again. Financial Mail (London).

In Gandhi's view, the means for Britain's plight is that the country consumed production is being directed in the wrong things and placed in the wrong place. British means. Resources over time the war have been serving a distorted market. They have sold in India and been put out of the so-called "civilized behavior." The way India were there. India is states based in the other of the goods. There is effect in the growing from live of choice. They have sold in the time.

Community for Christmas!

Dear Santa — All my silverware, please (not just a place setting!)

What girl hasn't dreamed of the Christmas—the one wonderful Christmas—she'll find her Community* under the tree.

Not a place setting or two, but all the fine silverware she's always wanted. Enough to start her entertaining proudly, graciously, with her table set for eight... or even twelve!

Not ordinary silverware—not lightweight silverware—but genuine Community, beloved by brides and their mothers for generations! Not ordinary patterns, either—but the five Community patterns loved round the world—including brand-new White Orchid,* so popular because it captures in silver the most beautiful flower of all!

If you're playing Santa to your sweetheart for your wife or your starry-eyed daughter, make this her Community Christmas! Your friendly dealer will show you the impressive weight and balance of Community. He'll point out the "Overlay" of solid silver that gives wear-protection where it's needed! And he'll tell you about his easy payment plan.

Extra Pieces—a Wonderful Gift!

If your lady already has her Community, what better gift than the extra pieces she needs to complete her service?

Just tell your dealer her pattern, and he'll help you make your selection.
